Leave Application Issues

Employees may sometimes face issues while applying for leave through the company portal, such as submission errors or leave not being approved. This can occur due to incorrect leave balance, incomplete request details, or pending approvals from reporting managers. Employees should ensure that they select the correct leave type, provide accurate dates, and include a valid reason for the leave. It is also important to check leave balance before applying. If the request remains pending for a long time, employees should follow up with their manager or HR team.

Leave Balance Not Updated

Employees may notice that their leave balance is incorrect or not updated after availing leave. This usually happens due to delays in system updates or incorrect leave entries. Employees should verify their leave history in the portal and ensure that all entries are accurate. If discrepancies are found, they should report the issue to HR with proper details such as leave dates and type of leave applied.

Salary Delay Issues

Salary delays can occur due to banking issues, incorrect account details, or payroll processing delays. Employees should first verify whether their bank account details are correctly updated in the HR system. It is also recommended to check with colleagues to confirm whether the issue is individual or organization-wide. If the salary is still not credited after the expected date, employees should contact the HR or payroll team for clarification.

Incorrect Salary or Payslip Issues

Employees may sometimes find discrepancies in their salary or payslip, such as incorrect deductions, missing allowances, or wrong calculations. In such cases, employees should carefully review their payslip and compare it with previous records. Any discrepancies should be reported to the HR or payroll team along with supporting details to ensure timely correction.

Attendance Not Recorded

Attendance issues may arise when employees forget to mark attendance or face system errors while logging in or out. This can affect salary calculations and leave records. Employees should regularly check their attendance logs in the system and ensure that entries are recorded correctly. If attendance is missing or incorrect, it should be reported to HR with relevant details such as date and time.

Work From Home Request

Employees who wish to work from home must follow company policies and obtain approval from their reporting manager. The request should be submitted through the official portal with a valid reason. Approval depends on job role, team requirements, and company guidelines. Employees should ensure that they have proper internet connectivity and access to necessary systems while working remotely.

Employee Details Update

Employees may need to update personal details such as contact number, address, or bank account information. These updates can usually be done through the HR portal. It is important to ensure that all details are accurate and up to date, as incorrect information may lead to issues in salary processing or communication. For critical updates, employees may need HR approval.

Holiday and Leave Policy Queries

Employees often have questions regarding company holidays, leave types, and leave policies. These details are generally available in the HR portal or employee handbook. Employees should review the official policy documents to understand eligibility, leave limits, and rules before applying for leave.

Resignation Process

Employees who wish to resign must follow the official resignation process defined by the company. This usually involves submitting a resignation request through the HR portal and serving a notice period as per company policy. Employees should ensure that all responsibilities are properly handed over before their last working day.

Relieving Letter and Experience Letter

After resignation and completion of the notice period, employees may require documents such as relieving letters and experience certificates. These documents are usually provided by HR after clearance of all formalities. Employees should ensure that exit procedures are completed to receive these documents without delay.

Payroll and Tax Queries

Employees may have questions regarding salary structure, tax deductions, or benefits. These details are typically available in payslips or company documents. For specific queries, employees should contact the payroll or HR team for clarification.

Grievance or Complaint Issues

Employees may face workplace-related concerns or issues that need to be addressed confidentially. In such cases, employees should report their concerns through official HR channels. The HR team ensures that all complaints are handled professionally and confidentially.

- When to Raise an HR Ticket

If an issue cannot be resolved through the HR portal or available resources, employees should raise a ticket under the HR category in the Service Desk Portal. While submitting the ticket, it is important to provide clear details of the issue along with any supporting documents to help the HR team resolve it efficiently.
